2009 PRINT OF THE YEAR

Giclée "Bad Boys" by Eddie LeRoy

Award winning wildlife artist, Eddie LeRoy, presents the unyielding 2009 Print of the Year: "Bad Boys." Set in the savannas of Africa, the three cape buffalo's display their stern determination to protect the herd. These animals have very few predators and have the ability to protect themselves and their young. LeRoy depicts these "Bad Boys" as they display their relentless attitude of doing just that. The unsettled dust and landscape gives a real representation of the Cape buffalo's environment.

Item Number P0910421

In true Africa fashion, the buffalo and oxpeckers serve to benefit one another as the birds feed off the insects that hassle the giant beast. Leaving no detail to spare, LeRoy creates a beautiful and uncompromising picture of the Cape buffalo. Friends of NRA has reproduced this painting as a giclée; a form of fine art that uses ink jet printing to perfectly capture every detail. Each canvas comes in a Modena Vintage frame with oatmeal lining and measures 18 ½" x 35 ½." Every giclée is printed, signed, numbered to 1,125, and framed in the U.S.A. Item Number P0910421

Artist Biography: Eddie LeRoy

Eddie LeRoy, the 2009 Friends of NRA Artist of the Year, resides with his wife and sons in Eufaula, Alabama. His art career began while he was in college, with an emphasis on wildlife. LeRoy uses acrylic to bring his scenes to life and has been chosen as the artist for numerous stamp-art programs. To LeRoy, "Bad Boys" is all about attitude. Having hunted all over the world, the Cape buffalo has always been one of Eddie's most intriguing subjects. Fascinated by their size, power, and demeanor, LeRoy captures all those traits in this painting. He notes how the buffalo do not mind the oxpeckers, however, you can see, they definitely mind the presence as Eddie LeRoy took the original photo.
